CENTER FOR COLLABORATIVE LEADERSHIP AND THE CENTER FOR SOCIAL POLICY

Executive Report

The mission of the Emerging Leaders Program, part of the Center for Collaborative Leadership at UMass Boston, is to “discover and empower leaders for tomorrow – skillful and accomplished leaders from all sectors of our community, who will be moving into major leadership positions in their organizations.”

The forty-four Fellows in the 2010 Emerging Leaders Program worked in collaboration with the Center for Social Policy at UMass Boston on their “reshaping poverty policy” initiative. The Fellows used their professional skills to analyze data and create awareness campaigns, in turn getting a deeper view of how their civic engagement can make a difference in addressing social issues that affect both businesses and communities. The Fellows examined factors that affect housing and family homelessness, working closely with three organizations, whose participation was made possible by the Hyams Foundation:

- Boston Tenant Coalition
- Greater Boston Fair Housing Center
- Homes for Families

The Fellows’ projects offer fresh views on five issues:

1. Understanding the unintended consequences of work support policies for working families: Looking at a fresh alternative. Work supports were established to subsidize the needs of working poor families and to help families achieve economic self-sufficiency. Existing eligibility criteria create unintended consequences. Small increases in earnings result in a disproportionate drop in net income, subverting incentives to get training and move to higher wages. A team of Fellows modeled these “cliff effects” and proposed a new tax credit idea.
2. Supporting families with good working conditions in low wage jobs. A team of Fellows examined what employers could do to support workers in low wage jobs, who need benefits and flexibility to retain their jobs. Lower turnover in these jobs is beneficial both to families who need stable income and to businesses that rely on the work done in these front line positions. The Fellows propose a campaign to urge companies toward “Going Golden,” by following the best practices in benefits and work conditions for workers in low wage jobs. They discuss how this campaign might take off, in the way that “Going Green” has become widespread among businesses.
3. Keeping tenants in homes: Effects of foreclosures on neighborhoods. A team of Fellows examined how rising foreclosure rates were contributing to family homelessness, with specific attention to tenants in good standing who are evicted if they live in buildings that are foreclosed. They will share their experiences in distilling and advancing the main features of new legislation to protect tenants in foreclosed properties. This legislation passed, and the next challenges are to drive awareness in the news, develop a toolkit for banks to manage occupied properties, and create a forum for banks to work with communities.

4. Generating support for affordable housing: Creating a marketing and multi-media messaging campaign. A team of Fellows developed a public awareness campaign in support of affordable housing in the Forest Hills/Jamaica Plain neighborhood of Boston. They examined the range of opinions expressed by supporters and opponents of affordable housing. They then tested a range of messages and created visuals for awareness campaigns. They will share ideas about next steps for spreading the awareness campaigns and tracking their impact.

5. Making all communities welcoming: “Race and Place” dialogues in Greater Boston today. A team of Fellows developed a pilot program for welcoming families of color to predominantly white suburbs. This program is made up of three phases: inform, educate, and commit. “Race and Place” dialogues will be facilitated in targeted neighborhoods to enhance communication and support the goals of integration and fair housing. The Fellows share their ideas for guiding principles that will make these dialogues meaningful and effective, based in part on their own experiences of learning and dialogue in their team.

After the Fellows share their ideas, the session will invite responses, particularly with a focus on how to take the proposed next steps forward, what additional ideas and resources will support this work, how the 2011 cohort of Fellows can advance the projects to the next level, and how rising professionals can sustain their civic engagement. Responses will include:

- Judith Kurland, Chief of Programs and Partnerships, Mayor’s Office, City of Boston will offer responses and reflections on the projects.
- Audience members will be invited to raise questions and share thoughts.
- Panelists from our partner organizations (Boston Tenant Coalition, Greater Boston Fair Housing Center, and Homes for Families), as well as a guest from the Massachusetts Department of Housing and Community Development, will respond to the projects and discuss their visions for next steps.
- A World Café lunch, from 12:00 – 1:30pm, will offer participants a chance to talk deeply and candidly about the exciting and promising next steps, as well as any lurking challenges, in order to galvanize action.
