Trustees Oppose Education Reorganization Proposal

The Board of Trustees voted unanimously to accept the statement by Board Chairman Joseph Healey as the University of Massachusetts response to the proposed reorganization plan for higher education. Mr. Healey's statement follows:

"The Trustees of the University of Massachusetts have reviewed and discussed the report of The Secretary for Educational and Cultural Affairs regarding the reorganization of the educational structure of Massachusetts.

"Although we are sympathetic with the Secretary's objectives and appreciate his interest in higher education, we find this plan to be without substantial merit.

"We will request additional information from the Secretary over the next two months before the Governor submits specific legislation. We are open to discussion and genuine efforts to arrive at mutual understandings.

"We were not a party to the deliberations that produced the plan. However it seems clear that the report does not acknowledge and could well reverse the substantial progress the Commonwealth has made in educational affairs in the last ten years. Others can speak to the steady improvement in elementary and secondary schools and the promising efforts to secure equitable educational opportunity in metropolitan areas. So far as higher education is concerned, however, the Commonwealth can be proud of the remarkable growth in service and quality of the community colleges, state colleges, and the University. The Trustees are proud that the University has had a leading role in this development.

"We are not persuaded of the wisdom of combining education from kindergarten to graduate school. We believe that the cities and towns of the Commonwealth are the proper bodies to determine the nature and pace of early education, and that high school graduates should have the opportunity to enter a variety of state-wide institutions of higher learning. Forced integration of all levels of education can only benefit an impulse towards a rigid monolithic structure.

"We question the division of the state into five new parts. To interpose another political subdivision and another layer of bureaucracy for whatever purpose seems to us to make genuine participation more and not less difficult.

Reorganization Proposal

"We speak from first-hand experience when we say that the multitude of boards, their cross-representation, their confusion of constituency, their demands of time, knowledge and energy simply will not work. The Board of Trustees of the University of Massachusetts meets in formal sessions ten months of the year. Its five committees meet twelve months. To expect a mass conglomeration of boards, committees, and commissions substantially to improve performance and save money is not realistic.

"We also express our great concern over the way in which the report proposes to dismember the University of Massachusetts. We have watched firsthand the development of this one-time agriculture college into one of the best public universities in the United States. We have assisted in the birth of a new urban campus and a new medical school, both of which are receiving national attention. To sort these campuses around like building blocks is to disregard the ties of history and tradition and the clear evidence of shared strength and joint progress.

"As trustees, we are open to recommendations, reforms, or reorganization. We are not open to making our educational institutions the laboratories for large-scale experimentation conducted in the name of economy and efficiency.

"There is real opportunity for state-wide vision, planning, and leadership within the general framework which already exists. It can work better without sacrificing essential strengths we have achieved."
