Congressional Testimony

Professor George Goodwin (Politics II) testified this summer before the Select Committee on Committees on his revisitation to "The Little Legislatures." He found many changes from his exhaustive study of the sub-committees of the House of Representatives which he made originally in 1961 and his new study. He concluded his testimony with this observation: "I believe the Congressional committee system to be a valuable means for broadening the political wisdom available to our government. It provides a balance between partisanship and expertise which other legislatures lack. I am sure that it can stand reform, but I hope that it isn't further decentralized and stripped of effective leadership in the process."

College I Name

A committee has been formed to recommend a name for College I. Faculty are urged to send suggestions to Mr. Paul Faler in the College I History Department by October 15. The name may be that of a non-living person (e.g. Thoreau), concept or virtue (e.g. Harmony), landmark or geographical place (e.g. Neponset), etc. Please provide the following information:

2. Explanation as to why you think this name is appropriate;
