Poem

Since I was a kid I lived in Brazil, a country with danger and wonderful things, more badly Things than good things.

I saw people crying, I saw people dying, and as a little kid I didn't knew what was happening. The violence had taught me that living is an incredible thing, I doesn't matter your color or your religion, the good thing is that you are alive.

People used to ask me "do you want drugs? I always answered no, because from drugs u can start to be a killer and from a killer to jail, and if you are a killer you going to end up getting killed by another killer, after that you know the place you're going to be in.
