Violence

Violence affected me in many ways. One way is these people made a group chat. The group chat had over 100 people. In the group chat they would post pictures and would (as they like to call it) "roasting". Roasting means when you say mean things about that person, based on that picture. Someone posted a picture of this girl (without her permission). On that photo there was more of 100 comments of rude things. The words were so bad I can't write them down. The girl felt like she was nothing. She was sad and angry all at the same time. So sad she started to feel bad, almost cry. Everyone laughed at her, they thought those words were funny, but to the girl they weren't. The girl was so sad that all those people were saying those mean things (some of who were her "friends"). That violence affect me because "that girl" was actually me.

Violence affected me in many ways. One way is that people made a group. The group had a name "The People". In the group they would post pictures and words (as they like to call it) "roasting" means when you say mean things about that person based on that picture. Someone posted a picture of this girl (with her name on it) on that photo. There were a lot of comments on it. I got words. The words were so bad I can't write them down. The girl felt like she was nothing. She was sad and angry all the time. She started to feel bad almost every day. Friends started to feel bad about the things she was doing. They found out that she was sad. They said that all these people were saying these mean things. Some of them were her "friends". That violence affected me because "that girl" was sad and me
