Undue influence of drug firms may find way into diagnoses

October 28, 2010

"PRESCRIPTION FOR prestige" (Page A1, Oct. 19) provides data that demonstrate the need for greater oversight of relationships between the pharmaceutical industry and the academic world. There is a clear conflict of interest when doctors can parlay their academic connections into hundreds of thousands of dollars to speak about a specific drug, especially when the company that manufactures the drug gets to decide what information is disseminated. But that's just the tip of the iceberg.

Undue industry influence may be compromising the very guidelines that doctors rely on for diagnosing and treating patients. This is because of a legal, but controversial, practice that permits researchers with financial ties to pharmaceutical companies (such as those who participate on company speakers bureaus or who receive large research grants) to serve as experts on medical guideline-writing panels.

Industry is thus allowed to have a strong voice in determining the validity of new diagnoses (for example, "attenuated psychotic symptoms syndrome" and "premenstrual dysphoric disorder") and to make recommendations about what drugs should be used to treat these disorders.

Sometimes there is questionable evidence to support the validity of new disorders, and clinical drug trials frequently yield conflicting results about the effectiveness and safety of medications. Allowing individuals who currently have, or who recently had, financial ties to industry to have such decision-making power creates an opportunity for industry to corrupt science.

Lisa Cosgrove
Cambridge
The writer, an associate professor at University of Massachusetts Boston, is currently a fellow at the Edmond J. Safra Center for Ethics at Harvard University.

© Copyright 2010 Globe Newspaper Company.

MORE FROM BOSTON.COM

Maine diver dies while cleaning yacht hull - Boston.com  (Local News)
The Ink Tank: Editorial cartoon roundup  (Editorial / Opinion)
Boy with rare brain infection on ventilator - Boston.com  (National news)
Eighteen-year-old dead after fight at Worcester party  (Boston.com)

MORE FROM THE WEB

Zooey Deschanel Unearths Her Family Roots  (Ancestry.com)
DNA Reveals a Surprise in Mario Lopez’s Past  (Ancestry.com)
iPhone Doesn’t, BlackBerry Does - 10 Notable Feature Differences  (CIO.com)
Parents Arrested for Driving Drunk ... With Their Kids in the Trunk!  (CafeMom)

INSIDE BOSTON.COM

QUIRKY BACK-TO-SCHOOL ITEMS
Brighten up your back-to-school experience this year

BACK-TO-SCHOOL GADGETS
Some top picks for starting this school year off right

NEW(ISH) BREWERIES
Meet some local fresh faces and underexposed gems

FIRST LADIES OF BOSTON SPORTS
Eastern equine encephalitis threat level raised to ‘high’ in four communities - Boston.com (Health)

Google’s Eric Schmidt: Why I love my BlackBerry (CNET)

[ Sponsored link ]

Local sports personalities and their significant others

PLUS...
Blogs | Crossword | Comics | Horoscopes | Games | Lottery | Caption contest | Today in history

MOST E-MAILED »

1. College Bound - Boston.com
2. Thai-flavored steamed fish in parchment
3. Roast chicken breasts with tomato, com, and avocado
4. Tomato pie
5. Five alternatives to crunches
6. How to Deal with Food Cravings
7. Pressure-cooker kindergarten

FOLLOW THIS LIST ON TWITTER: @BOSTON POPULAR