The prerequisite to effective vocalization is the presence of normal speech and hearing. Early intervention is crucial to the development of language skills. Inadequate or delayed speech and language development can lead to various complications, including difficulties in social interaction, academic performance, and emotional well-being.

The importance of parent-teacher collaboration cannot be overstated. Regular communication between educators and parents is essential for the comprehensive support of children with speech and language disorders. Early detection and intervention can greatly improve outcomes and quality of life for these individuals.
