Graduate Studies in Archives

MA in History, Archives Track ~ Certificate In Archives Program

Proficiency | Experience | Engagement

Role of Archivists in Communities

- Acquire, manage, preserve, and provide access to historical records
- Assist communities with documenting their unique stories
- Serve as a link to the records that inform family historians and genealogists
- Utilize digital technologies & media to expand public access to on-line collections
- Digitize images and records to make them available for use by peers, researchers, and diverse communities worldwide
- Serve as the bridge between historic information and the users who can benefit from its public availability

Creating Professional Opportunities

Students and partners benefit from shared collaborations that foster professional development.

- Symposiums
- Conferences
- Publications
- Networking

[These shared experiences are] “instrumental to the craft.”

Accomplishments

- Over 200,000 document pages made available to the public at archives, on-line, and through blogs
- Processed and organized documentary collections for leading institutions and nonprofit organizations
- Created finding aids: indices that describe the materials in individual collections
- Preserved images, paper, and multi-media content for long-term storage, using state-of-the art technological and digital processes.

Benefits extend to the public at large as efforts to foster Open Access & Crowd Sourcing initiatives make history accessible-and relevant-to all interested parties

Promoting Professional Partnerships

Providing a model that can guide other programs in creating dynamic partnerships with communities and organizations locally and worldwide.

Feedback from the Field:

“The internship...demonstrated to me the skill, knowledge, and flexibility required for working in archives.”

- C. Moynihan, MA 2013, Archives Track

Students are “well-grounded in archival theory and practice.” The UMass Boston Archives benefits “so much” from students’ “high quality work.”

- Joanne Riley, University Archivist, UMass Boston

“A project like this is where archives are heading. To have digital cataloguing experience like this is amazing.”

- J. Silva, MA Candidate, Archives Track

“Everyone learns from one another ... it was an honor to host our UMass Boston intern.”

- Lisa Long Feldman,
