Violence

Violence has affected my mom's side of the family emotionally so I was in fear this situation might happen again.

It was around July or August and I woke up to my dog in my bed so I let the dog out of my room and close the door. My sister walks into and says "keep the dog in your room dont let him out we have people over." I said "okay". So me being me I wanted to know what happened. I knew that noone would tell me what happened so I pretended to use the bathroom. All I heard was someone crying. So I walked into the kitchen and my mom's friend asked "what happened?" My sister said "They shot and killed our uncle." Everyone had a shocked and sad face. I was in shock and couldn't think, I started feeling so sad. Everyone was on the verge of tears. We kept looking at my mom. She was not handling it well. My mom was crying harder and harder. I wanted to make My mom happy, so I hung around her for a few days to make her smile. So a few days passed and I overheard my mom on the phone with my grandma. My mom asked "how did this happen?" My grandma said "He was in his and some people went to his house and I guess opened the window and woke him up and shot him 8 times in the chest area." I felt like I can hear her heart breaking. Few weeks later my mom is finally smiling but deep down I know that my mom is not happy about losing her brother she just will want to break down in tears.

Violence is a bad thing, people use violence when they dislike someone. When violence happens some people get injured, people get hurt, and some people don't even make it into the next day. Violence is everywhere, then there's people who stand there and do nothing. They either stand there or record everything on their phone. So instead of violence use your words people won't get seriously hurt.

like I can have but heart-breaking. I'm not happy about losing my brother. I just will want to know how it was.
Violence is a bad thing. People use violence when they dislike someone. When violence happens, some people get in trouble, people get hurt, and some people don't know where it is in the next day.
Violence is everywhere, then there's people and things that are bad. They're not good things of record everything on that there so instead of violence, we can help people who get hurt but
