An all too brief essay by Prof. Shaun O'Connell, English, in the March issue of the Boston Irish News, poses the question about a literary emergence of Irish-American writers comparable to a great post-war emergence of Jewish-American talent. The question, initiated by John Updike, notes John O'Hara and F. Scott Fitzgerald as comparable to the established reputations of Bellow, Malamud, Roth, Heller and others.

O'Connell wonders, at first, if the comparison is strained and then goes forward to agree it is not with an analysis of works by O'Neill, Farrell and the aforementioned O'Hara and Fitzgerald.

An all too brief exposition because we wanted to read about, let's say, the O'Connors---Flannery from Georgia and Ed from Providence. But surely they must be covered in the Irish-American Literature and Culture course here.

Prof. Ros Barron presented her video works at Massachusetts College of Art early in March. Prof. Barron, on leave from the University this semester, is working on new video pieces under an Individual Artists Grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

Prof. Zardoya Honored

Sin Nombre (Vo. IX, No. 3), one of the most distinguished literary journals in Latin America, has been dedicated to Professor Concha Zardoya who retired from UMB on May, 1977. The "Festschrift" has as central theme twentieth century Spanish poetry. Several pieces are essays on some of the most important Spanish poets of the century: Garcia Lorca, Jorge Guillen, Luis Cernuda, Jose Hierro; others are studies of professor Zardoya's own poetry. Distinguished friends, colleagues and students of Concha Zardoya contributed to the "Festschrift". They include Maria Teresa Babin (City University of New York), Birute Cipliauskaite (Wisconsin), Andrew P. Debicki (Kansas), Manuel Duran (Yale), Stephen Gilman (Harvard), Ricardo Guillon (Chicago), Luce Lopez Baralt (University of Puerto Rico) and Isabel Paraiso de Leal (Montreal). Poems in honor of Professor Zardoya by Jorge Guillen and Jose Luis Cano are also included in this issue of Sin Nombre, edited by Nilita Vientos Gaston, and by Professors Maria Luisa Osorio and Efrain Barradas of the Spanish Department.

Anthems in New Tongues

Crackling dialogue. Pungent observations. Frank incisions. That's a brief description of Prof. Roger Prouty, History and former State Senator William Saltonstall speaking at the first of the Massachusetts Cultural Heritage lectures. You should not have missed it.

So, get out a red pencil, and mark your calendar and reserve Wednesday, April 18 at 8 p.m. in the Small Science Auditorium for the second in the series, this time featuring former Governor and Ambassador to Italy John A. Volpe and Prof. Gerald Volpe, French and Italian departments.

Both will underscore the contributions in politics, business, science and culture to these shores by the descendants of Romulus and Remus. Do come. The series is sponsored by the Office for Extended Day.

Give Us a DOR-CHES-TER

For the remainder of the semester, kindly pursue the exceptionally fine exhibit in the Library on Dorchester. Photos, artifacts, history, maps, memorabilia are among the items on display at the second, fourth, fifth, and tenth floors of the Library. It's appropriate that the Library is sponsoring an exhibit of our "home town", founded in 1630, and because the largest contingent of students (863) at the Harbor Campus are residents of this fine amalgam of neighborhoods.

The Catherine Forbes Clark Physical Education Building is now taking shape with steel girders being placed on the cement forms which, up to now, looked like Stonehenge. The timetable for the completion of this gymnasium-swimming pool-skating rink is early 1980.

The John F. Kennedy Library is adding not only a significant academic dimension to the campus but the geometrical creation of I.M. Pei is progressing with the placement of the pre-cast white panels on the steel frame.

The ditch running from the Utility Building on the shoreline, across the roadway, and alongside the Library is a construction project to replace the corroded pipes which carry salt water from the cove to the Utility Building where it is used to provide chilled water for air conditioning, heating and ventilation for the campus. The project is expected to be completed by July 1.
