

Trotter Review

Volume 23

Issue 1 A Place in the Neighborhood: Pushed Out, Pushing Back

Article 11

9-22-2016

Contributors

Follow this and additional works at: http://scholarworks.umb.edu/trotter_review

Recommended Citation

(2016) "Contributors," Trotter Review: Vol. 23: Iss. 1, Article 11.

Available at: http://scholarworks.umb.edu/trotter_review/vol23/iss1/11

This Back Matter is brought to you for free and open access by the William Monroe Trotter Institute at ScholarWorks at UMass Boston. It has been accepted for inclusion in Trotter Review by an authorized administrator of ScholarWorks at UMass Boston. For more information, please contact library.uasc@umb.edu.

Contributors

Jen Douglas is a research consultant on housing and neighborhood issues. She holds a PhD in public policy from John W. McCormack Graduate School of Policy and Global Studies at the University of Massachusetts Boston. She lives in the Boston neighborhood of Jamaica Plain.

Tomás González has dedicated his professional career to running political and electoral campaigns and organizing and advocating around social justice issues. He has worked for the Massachusetts Communities Action Network and was the former political director for the Service Employees International Union's campaign to raise the state minimum wage and provide earned sick time to 1 million low-wage workers in Massachusetts.

James Jennings is a professor emeritus at Tufts University, where he taught in the Graduate Department of Urban and Environmental Policy and Planning. He has published widely on urban affairs and continues to be engaged in a range of civic issues aimed at social justice and neighborhood improvement.

Keith Jennings, a human rights and democratic development specialist, is an adjunct professor of political science at Howard University. He serves as president of the African American Human Rights Foundation and vice chairman of the board of directors of the U.S. Human Rights Network.

May Louie is a visiting practitioner in the Urban and Environmental Policy and Planning Department at Tufts University and serves as a curriculum developer for its Teaching Democracy project. During her twenty years on the staff of the Dudley Street Neighborhood Initiative, she played leadership roles in its Rebuilding Communities Initiative, Dudley Learning Center, Civic Engagement Initiative, Dudley Children Thrive, and Boston Promise Initiative. She was a member of the Academy Advisory Board and faculty of the National Community Land Trust.

Michael Malyszko has been a commercial photographer and video director for 35 years. His studio is in Boston's Leather District.

Howard Manly, former executive editor of the Bay State Banner, has been a journalist for three decades. He has reported for the Boston Globe, Philadelphia Inquirer, and Newsweek magazine, and has been a columnist for the Boston Herald. On television, he has been a correspondent on "Greater Boston," a nightly news show, and host of "Basic Black," a public affairs show, both on PSB affiliate WGBH. Manly is the coauthor of Lift Every Voice, a nonfiction book about the Boys Choir of Harlem.

Teddy Kÿ-Nam Miller, a public interest attorney, is a senior associate at the PolicyLink Center for Infrastructure Equity in Oakland, California. He worked on housing and community investment issues at a national nonprofit in Washington, D.C., where he also served as an advisor on transportation and infrastructure to a senior member of the U.S. House Appropriations Committee.

Zebulon V. Miletsky is an assistant professor of Africana Studies and history at the State University of New York at Stony Brook, where he teaches African-American history. He has received fellowships from the Northeast Consortium for Faculty Diversity and was a postdoctoral fellow in African American Studies at Case Western Reserve University. The Boston native lives in Brooklyn.

Kalima Rose is the senior director of the PolicyLink Center for Infrastructure Equity in Oakland, California. With three decades of expertise in economic, housing, and land-use policies, she leads PolicyLink's sustainable communities work, helping implement regional equity, fair housing, and new infrastructure investments that strengthen economic resilience.

Casey Schreiber is an assistant professor of urban studies and public policy at Dillard University in New Orleans. Her research interests include urban sociology, neighborhood rebuilding after disaster, and the role of sports in urban life. Her forthcoming book, Saints in the Broken City, looks at the role of Saints football and fandom in New Orleans's recovery after Hurricane Katrina.